AS I SAW HER ON POPOCATEPETL Miss Hinde, of Mexico, Wanted to Know "Is It Fur!"

From the St. Louis Christian Advocate. After an hour's rest in the crater I sent the guide to the top to make observations as to the progress or whereabouts of the other members of our party. I knew that Burkhead (North Carolina) a man of decidedly philosophical turn of mind, would not subject himself to the sentimental inconalences necessary to reach that "old pile of common snow" at the crater. I doubted seriously whether Miss Hinde, of Mexico, Mo., who, however, cause of her great fatigue at the beginning. As I expected, the guide returned reporting that all had turned back. Blake (Hoston) was wicked enough to harbor a feeling of triumph over the "weaker rit," while I tried to be charitable and pious. Upon arriving at the top of the crater to begin the descent, I saw far down on the steep incline, two objects: one was a Mexican guide stand ing erect; the other a figure prone up-on the snow. Who could it be? Why should they rest upon the decent? But look! The figure stands erect! Shades of snow! It is a statute of a woman, but We hurried to the scence, and as I looked upward and said, "Is it far?
